Confessing

Confession

LeAnne Zook

Deep calls to deep. We call to you from the depths of our hearts.

Again, life has been taken, weapons of war used in the most mundane of places – a massage table, a grocery store.

Still, life has been lost, our communal will to protect each other weakened by our economic realities, by our despair at our solitude.

We weep as we remember those who are not here, by illness and violence.

We rage at the injustice, the inequality, and consequences of choices by our political leaders.

We confess that our sorrow and our anger are not enough – for you call us to justice, to action, to "good trouble".

Give us the tongue of a teacher, that we may sustain each other through our weariness.

Give us the ear to hear your call, as this community of searchers journeys forward.

Do not let us turn back.

Deep calls to deep. You call to us from the depth of your love.

Calling us to deep hope. We come to you, God.
